

Letter To The Editor Continued From Page 10

not promoted notice of this event, they may have tried to finish it without any of our knowledge. Trying to sell something we all consider of significance to ourselves and our lives, and to our communities, behind our backs, that doesn't seem very trustworthy to me.

On a second note of trustworthiness, last minute, they wanted us to write in our questions rather than have us ask them ourselves. I don't see any reason for this but to obstruct or censor our thoughts and feelings about this decision. That's not trustworthy!

Loyal- In Scouting, leadership is a major component. Leaders need to be loyal to the cause they are trying to defend or aid in. Our leaders seem to have failed this job of loyalty, as they started a sale behind our backs, a sale of something near and dear to our hearts, time, and effort.

Helpful- This would seem pretty self explanatory, but how helpful are they being if they are attempting to go through with a sale without our knowledge or agreeance, that doesn't benefit us, but benefits solely their salaries?

Friendly- If they aren't trustworthy, aren't loyal, and especially aren't helpful, are they really that friendly?

Courteous- To be courteous is to be polite and mannerly. They have come out seemingly polite, as anyone would when they hide behind the screen of their facebook posts, or as they are kept safe from the tough questions in their radio interviews. But let's not forget how they have tried to deceive us in many fashions, that's not very mannerly if I have anything to say about it.

Kind- You can't possibly be seen as kind, if you aren't seen in relation to any of the other laws.

Obedient- We live in a state of democracy. Most of us don't want to see the camp be sold. To be obedient is to comply or to be willing. It doesn't match up!

Cheerful- They don't seem cheerful in their attempts to satisfy the majority's needs. They may be cheerful once all this is said and done and they can claim their new salaries, however.

Thrifty- The literal definition of thrifty is "to use money carefully." They have clearly not handled their money carefully enough to pay their ever increasing salaries, and rather than find a way to balance it out in a thrifty fashion, they wish to take something of value from us instead.

Brave- If I were brave, I wouldn't request people last minute on Facebook to send in their questions and concerns ahead of time, where some people may not even see it, so as to keep people from asking tough, embarrassing questions. I would persevere like a strong, brave Boy Scout and face it head on.

Clean- I'm not here to judge how they keep themselves clean and how often they attend to their hygiene, I don't know that information, but what I do know is that they have not been clean in their act and in their manner of sorting out the sale and the whole situation.

Reverent- This is intense. A scout is reverent. God wouldn't like to know how you are stealing the camp away from us for your own greedy, lust-for-money, gluttonous pleasures. Do you pray to God at night that we will just let this go and let you take all our memories, volunteer work, time, effort, money, blood, sweat and tears just so you can have a slight salary increase at corporate? Do you think God would approve of this whole situation right here? It seems more like the work and temptation of the devil to me. Greed is a deadly sin. Lust (of money) is one too. Gluttony is one as well. And to steal is breaking one of God's ten commandments.
